Survive a Kitchen Remodel With These Simple Steps

A kitchen remodel is something that plenty of homeowners are definitely excited about. After all, when you want a kitchen remodeling done in your home, you can't just call up a contractor and expect it to be done in a few days.

There is an entire process that goes into a single kitchen remodel, from the planning stage, the procurement of permits, all the way to the actual remodel itself. However, when the actual remodeling occurs, one can't help but be excited about it.

Your dream kitchen is about to be brought to life! However, with the entire remodel going on, how are you supposed to cook your meals and deal with all of your kitchen-related needs while your kitchen is being worked on? To make sure that you survive your kitchen remodel, here are some simple steps to take.

1. Stick to the bare essentials

When you have a kitchen remodel done in your home, you will have to expect that your regular cooking/dining routine will be severely disrupted, making it difficult to prepare food in the same way that you did with a fully equipped and stocked kitchen.

With this in mind, it's best to stick to the bare essentials. You can't prepare food that would take you too long to prepare, so use simple dishes for you and your family's meals.

Don't prepare any food that sees the need to use complicated food techniques, like needing sous vide and even your food processor. Stick to only the essentials that you need and store the rest of your kitchen gear while your kitchen remodel is going on.

2. Designate a spot for your food & kitchen prep

For some people, a kitchen remodeling means the opportunity to eat out regularly, which is great for convenience, but not so great for your finances. Eating out regularly, especially for all of you and your family's meals is bound to put some strain on your finances after enough time, which is why you're going to have to learn how to work with what you can in the current state of your kitchen.

One way to help get some use out of your kitchen in its current state is by carving out a space that you can use, whether it's in a usable part of your kitchen or your home, to prepare small meals.

Again, it shouldn't be anything complicated, since you'll only be handling the bare essentials, but having a designated space in your home to prepare simple meals can help make the kitchen remodel process a little easier to bear.

3. Work with small appliances

If you're looking for a spot within your home where you can prep your food, it would help make it easier to find a spot by sticking with smaller appliances for your food prep needs. Hot plates, microwaves, and toaster ovens, these small appliances are more portable, which makes them easier to work with and move around the house, which is great if you need to keep moving around your designated food prep area.

4. Keep a stash of nonperishables

With how complicated it's going to be for you to make a decent meal for yourself, it might be tempting for you to give up on cooking altogether. To make it much easier to bear with, you should keep a stash of nonperishable food items that you can turn to if you just can't be bothered to deal with preparing food in a limited environment.

It can be anything from canned goods and cereal to crackers and trail mix. These non-perishable food items are great meal substitutions that do a great job of satiating your hunger while still being fairly healthy.

5. Consider leaving town while the remodel is going on

If your new kitchen remodel is going to be difficult to work around, then you may want to consider leaving town for a vacation or a business trip while the remodel is going on. This is a simple solution to avoiding all of the inconveniences that you may face during the remodel.

You can leave the remodel in the hands of someone that you trust, leave town for a few days, avoid all of the problems that come with dealing with a remodel, and come home to a brand new kitchen.

6. Remember why you're doing this in the first place

With all of the inconveniences that people have to deal with when they have a kitchen remodel done, it's a wonder why anybody makes the decision to go with it at all. However, a good way to deal with a kitchen remodel is to remind yourself why you made the decision to have your kitchen redone in the first place.

Sure, it might be difficult, and quite frankly, annoying to deal with all of the inconveniences of your kitchen remodel now, but in return, you're going to have a great new kitchen that you and your family can enjoy for the following years. It's important to remind yourself that all of this is temporary, no matter how long and drawn out the process feels.

It might seem rather difficult now, but when you're in your new kitchen, cooking delicious food, the memory of the things you had to deal with during the kitchen remodel will only serve to enhance the overall effect of your kitchen.

Dealing with the inconveniences of a kitchen remodel is something that nobody ever wants to have to deal with, but it may be necessary at times. As long as you keep the points indicated in mind, the entire kitchen remodeling process will fly by, and you'll have your brand new kitchen in no time!
